Re: Senior Technical Writer

I submit this application to be considered for the opportunity of Senior Technical Writer as advertised on LinkedIn.

I have consumed and understood the position description and also navigated the included links to additional information. I also reference the term “there’s a lot” :) and acknowledge, whilst the pages do contain substantial content, I am grateful to have access to this additional information.

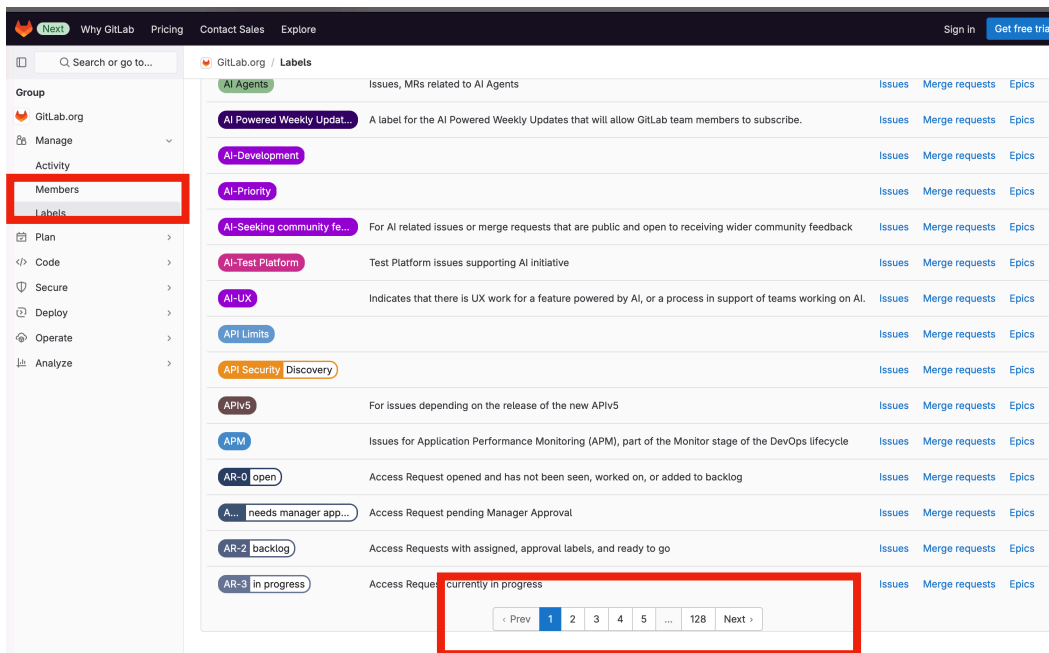

The information has provided valuable insight about existing content and current state, and provided additional context to the objectives associated with this role.

I pride myself on always being a team player, regardless of a position title. Whilst I am confident in my ability and skills with technical writing, content, documentation and communication, I always approach new tasks and requirements with a collaborative approach in order to build rapport, and engage and learn from SMEs, Engineers, or Product owners.

I have included my career summary outlining my experience and key skills, and take this opportunity to acknowledge the digital landscape changing rapidly, as we continue to evolve and ‘keep up’ (with good intentions), whilst working towards establishing a validated first ‘baseline’.

Below is a small snapshot of my initial observations and insight toward ‘my school of thought’ on the bigger picture, should my application have a positive outcome.

- I celebrate that GitLab has an actual dedicated technical writing function, team and approach. I have NEVER seen this... EVER. You deserve the top Hat!! Seriously I am here for this!!
- Goal - I feel I understand the objectives, but there is a lot of confusion and grey area - intent, audience, objective.
- Labels - 128 pages? (I am not a GitLab SME)... is this reality?

I submit this introduction letter and application with good intention. I am confident I could add value in this role and contribute to team goals.

Whilst I acknowledge that my approach may not align with your current requirements, I hope my time spent in preparing my application and my intent is received in the positive manner.

Thank you for your time.

Regards
